CHAPTER 73: BON

第柒拾參話：「盆」

TL Note:

Bon or Obon (お盆) is a Japanese Buddhist custom where the spirits of one's ancestors are honored a la Day of the Dead. In modern times, people typically go back to their hometowns and visit and clean their ancestor's graves in anticipation for their return. The return of the honored dead is the central theme of this chapter, so it's incumbent upon me to supply a little background. As you might expect, people are allowed to take off work to go back to where they came from, even though it is not strictly a public holiday, and it is one of the busiest travel times of the entire year, second perhaps to Golden Week.

Obon is unique in that the starting date depends on the region: July 15th in the Tokyo Metropolitan area, Yokohama, and the Tohoku area or northern part of Japan; August 15th in most of the rest of the country, including the Kansai region, Hokkaido, Niigata, and the southern part of the Kanto region. Obon can also be celebrated on the 15th day of the 7th month of the lunar calendar in other regions like the Chugoku Region (Hiroshima, Okayama, Tottori, Yamaguchi, etc) as well as Shikoku, Kyushu, and the myriad islands that stretch from Kyushu all the way to and including Okinawa. Because the lunar calendar varies with each year, Obon in these regions may be celebrated even in September.

TL Note:

Page 12: Even as the TL of this series, I had to go back and remind myself what the different types of eclipses/blights are, so I would imagine that the readership might have forgotten as well. The extra after Chapter 44 speaks about the different types in detail, but I'll provide a quick primer here.

- Normal types, which vary in general, but are capable of being cleared by a single student. Canceled if it rains.

- Fixed types, which the current Blight, "Obon," is, is an event that only occurs on predetermined days. The first day of school was such an event, with the monsters who had the character "Beginning" on them. Canceled if it rains. (Additional example: Banquet)

- Separation types, which occur when the student population becomes divisible by 3. If a group does not clear the event, they perish. Canceled if it rains. (Dragon and Shaman)

- Special types, which continue to get stronger until solved or everyone has died. They may incorporate elements of other types of Blight and often have complex solutions. Will not be canceled in the event of rain, generally. (Water, Flower, and Kingdom)
